MOKENA PTA CARNIVAL WAS A GRAND BIG SUCCESS

As the folks who visited the Mokena PTA Carnival and Bazaar last Friday and Saturday nights well know, the affair was a great success. It seems as if the entire community and a goodly share of visitors from other communities passed through the doors of the school on one or both evenings. And judging from comments freely passed among the happy throng, a good time was had by all.

Financially, the Carnival exceeded the fondest expectations of those who spent long hours and much work in planning it. At the time this was written, profits realized were in the neighborhood of $225. This figure is subject to final auditing of all expenses and the exact amount will be reported next week. This handsome addition to the Mokena P. T. A. treasury will make it possible for this organization to expand its activities considerably and to extend its traditional record of service to the community.

Credit for the success of the Carnival is widespread, extending from the special committee charged with the responsibility of planning and running it and the numerous willing workers who smiled through long hours of hard work, to the many people who visited the Carnival during its two day run.

New Lenox Man Burned When Gasoline Ignites

While Joseph Bruns was filling the gas tank of his Plymouth car at his home north of the Francis road in New Lenox Township last Saturday evening about 8 o'clock, he tripped causing the gasoline from his container to spill on the lantern which he was holding for light.

This immediately ignited the gasoline, which set his overalls on fire and the rest of his clothing. He succeeded in getting the overalls off, and then jumped into a water trough filled with water and put out the fire on the rest of his clothing.

The fire quickly spread to the garage, burning the doors and several bales of hay, but not the garage.

His wife saw the accident and went quickly to the home of Mr. Knupp, a near neighbor and called her brother, Mr. Harlow Jensen, and then called the New Lenox Fire department who responded at once and put the fire out.

Mrs. Bruns and her brother took Mr. Bruns at once to Silver Cross hospital in Joliet where the burns were treated and which proved to be first, second and third degree burns on his legs and hands.

Mr. Bruns who is 20 years old, is now in the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Amos Bruns in New Lenox and is doing nicely.

Aged Woman Killed By Streamliner

Mrs. Anna Jensen, aged 71 years, was struck and killed instantly by the Rock Island Peoria east bound Rocket last Thursday morning about 9 o'clock on the Boyer woods crossing east of Tinley Park. According to the testimony of the engineer at the inquest he saw Mrs. Jensen from a distance and blew the whistle thinking she would notice the approaching train but she appeared to be in thoughts and failed to hear the whistle. The engineer applied the brakes but could not bring his train to an immediate stop as it was traveling about 85 miles an hour. Mrs. Jensen and her husband Herman were making their home with their daughter Mrs. Nielsen, whose husband recently acquired the Boyer property.

Surviving are the husband, three daughters Margaret and Ingabard, Tinley Park, Helen Bean, New Orleans, 2 sons Herman and Christian. According to the family Mrs. Jensen was on her way to Tinley Park to take the next suburban train to Chicago where she was to attend a church meeting.

N. W. UNIVERSITY PROFESSOR VISITS TINLEY SCHOOL

On Nov. 3 the Tinley Park school had a visitor from Northwestern University, Professor E. T. McSwain. Mr. Flerkre had an opportunity to explain our program to him and attempt to give him a picture of our aims. After that Prof. McSwain visited with the children and commented upon the type of program carried on in each room that he visited.

We were quite proud to have him visit our school because it is a compliment to any school to have people interested enough in the work to come out and see what is being developed from day to day. He also gave demonstrations which delighted the children.

Prof. McSwain is well known in the Middle west for his work in the field of elementary education and both the faculty and pupils welcomed him. He commented upon "the high morale among the boys and girls of the Tinley Park school"

After his visit the faculty had an opportunity to meet with him informally. At this time we would like to thank Mrs. E. Brown Campbell and Mrs. Henry Clark for their efforts in having a very lovely luncheon for our guest and faculty.

Washington, D. C. EISENHOWER'S BRILLIANT PLANNING

When the inside story of General Eisenhower's European war planning is finally told, the American public will be amazed at some of the things he has put across. Here is part of the story:

Long before D day Eisenhower had timed every operation down to the last minute. The most important maneuver was to break through the Germans' Atlantic wall and wedge an opening through which other troops could pour. The German High Command considered this wall impregnable. Yet Eisenhower's driving demand for offense was such that he allotted his men exactly 45 minutes to get through.

He had each move so carefully timed and planned that, after 45 minutes, other ships, supplies, men would be piling up on the beach, would have no place to go unless the break-through was accomplished in the time allotted.

Before the invasion a full-scale replica of German fortifications was constructed in England, built from aerial photographs. And day after day, American troops rehearsed their break-through. The best time they were able to make in these rehearsals, however, was one hour and 30 minutes. But when D day finally came, thanks to General Eisenhower's dynamic planning, they made it not in 45, but in 35 minutes.

But with his advance into France timed to the hour and day, Eisenhower, after the original breakthrough, ran into difficulty.

Lieut. Gen. Omar Bradley kept right on schedule in penetrating south into Normandy. And Maj. Gen. Joe Collins was on schedule or ahead of it in penetrating Cherbourg. In fact, they had developed, in cooperation with Eisenhower, a new type of advance. Instead of advancing so many miles and then waiting for supplies to come up, as at the slow-moving Anzio beachhead, they developed the tactic of barging ahead regardless of supplies.

Thus General Collins surprised the Nazis and the world, ignoring Nazi machine-gun nests, forgetting about supplies and forging right into Cherbourg before its defenders knew what was happening.

Trouble with Monty. Eisenhower's chief trouble, however, was with General Montgomery, whom Winston Churchill once described as "magnificent in defeat, insufferable in victory."

General Montgomery had been given Caen as his objective. But days passed and nothing happened. The offensive-minded Eisenhower kept hammering at Montgomery, urging an advance. But nothing happened. Actually, Montgomery had just as high a rank as Eisenhower, had seen many more battles, so Eisenhower was in no position to get too rough.

Finally, Air Intelligence showed that German resistance behind the Allied lines was a mere shell. He could tell from air observation that the Nazis were able to bring up only about 25 per cent of their needed supplies. Their reinforcements had to hide in the daytime, advance only at night. Most of the bridges across the Seine were down. So Eisenhower, tired of waiting for Montgomery and already behind schedule, gave the order for General Bradley to ignore Montgomery and break through the Nazi lines to the south.

DEMOBILIZING OLDER MEN

War department officials are under heavy pressure to make one very important change in the army's plan for demobilization.

The demobilization plan did not consider servicemen's age. However, men overseas, particularly those in the European theater, have been angrily pointing out that the British demobilization program gives each man a specific number of points for age, thus assures older men a better break. The army said it had drafted older men "reluctantly," because most were heads of families. The GIs now point out that it would be equally logical to discharge these older men among the earliest, since they are needed by their families.

Veterans' administration studies reveal that the cost of keeping older men in uniform is greater than for younger men, since the army pays out large sums for dependency. Allotments have proved meager and scarcely able to keep families together. Yet, under the demobilization plan as it stands now, family heads would be among the last men to be released.

CAPITAL CHAFF

¶ The danger of a new crime wave as a result of letting returning war heroes keep captured revolvers and machine guns is worrying officials. ¶ Publisher Joe Patterson wasn't kidding when he explained that the New York News was dropping the "Presidential Battle Page" because of libel. He faces a libel suit from CIO's Beanie Baldwin. . . . The GOP accused Baldwin of drawing a salary from the government while working with the CIO and Patterson printed it.

Famous Animal in Aleutians

Here is "Babe," the most famous animal in the Aleutian islands. Babe, a cow, was brought to that western outpost by plane and now provides seven quarts of fresh milk daily for the headquarters staff. In charge of Babe is Earl Gist, seaman 2/c, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Shown at the right, looking over the famous cow, is G. L. Peterson of Minneapolis. Dehydrated milk is being used by most of the troops in that section as well as other war theaters.

THE CHURCH DURING WAR AND PEACE

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 5:43-48; Romans 13:1-7.

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed are the peace-makers: for they shall be called sons of God.—Matthew 5:9.

Everywhere men are talking about the coming peace. They are concerned lest having won a war we may lose the peace through the selfishness or the indifference of men. It is a great problem and one about which we are rightly concerned.

Why is it then that the most important factor in assuring a just and friendly settlement of the problem is left out of men's deliberations? Why is there so little (if any) thought of God and prayer to Him for the needed guidance and wisdom?

We know that there can never be an abiding peace until Christ comes to establish His kingdom, but in the meantime, we should seek to bring Christian principles to bear on the relations of men and nations. We are to show:

I. A Higher Measure of Love (Matt. 5:43-48).

The world has established its own principle of conduct based on selfish advantage. It pays to be polite to those who can favor you, so cultivate their good will by acts of courtesy and kindness. Your neighbor may be able to help you in an hour of need, so do good to him as you have opportunity.

But an enemy—what can you gain from kindness to him? Hate him, and treat him like an enemy.

Christianity knows nothing of such a spirit. Even though it be necessary to fight against wicked men in order to hinder their evil plans, we need not lose our love for them. Even those who spitefully use us may be loved for Christ's sake. "Consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself" (and went right on loving them), "lest ye be wearied" in your own love for those who bear the sad name of enemies (see Heb. 12:3).

This is admittedly a high standard, but it is not too high for those who know the love of Christ.

II. A Higher Degree of Loyalty (Rom. 13:1-4).

An intelligent Christian is the best citizen. He knows that all government is based on the power and authority of God, and hence he recognizes the legality and authority of duly constituted governmental agencies.

No matter how much man has perverted or degraded government, yet it is in essence the expression of a ministry of God (v. 4). How deeply ashamed that should make those who regard political office as a means of personal gain and advantage, or who use their authority to permit or promote that which is against God.

Every public official should recognize God as the giver of his authority and seek the Lord's special grace and guidance in the discharge of his duties. Every citizen should highly regard the one who rules as having a power ordained of God (v. 1), for the good of the nation (v. 4).

Here then is the solution of the political problems which are causing upheaval all over the world, namely, a revival of Christian testimony and faith, for it will lead to a loyalty on the part of the people which is quite unknown where Christianity does not bring its true influence to bear.

That kind of love for men and loyalty to government necessarily brings about:

III. A Higher Standard of Patriotism (Rom. 13:5-7).

There is more to real patriotism than flag waving and high-sounding oratory. There must be a conscientious willingness to serve the nation in willing obedience to the command or the request of proper authority.

The Christian gives just that kind of patriotic support to his country (v. 5). His enlightened conscience demands it, and he responds.

Then too, there must be support of the government by the payment of taxes. Think of the thousands who are engaged in the business of evading their just share of the cost of government.

The Christian has no share in such things, for he is ready to pay his share of the expense of government as a ministry of the Lord (v. 6).

No government can function properly nor long endure which does not have the respect and confidence of those governed. There can be nothing but criticism, discontent, and disobedience in such an atmosphere.

We have said it before, but we say it again—the best thing that could happen to America politically is a revival of Christianity. Our national leaders ought to set the example and encourage the people to follow in repentance, restitution and God's blessing. Read II Chronicles 7:14.

ABOUT

Progress of our Pacific war program and the growing possibilities of reasonably quick recapture of some rubber areas in the Far East have made men who know the rubber industry best emphasize the need for sound policies to deal with the economic and political problems which the gradual return of natural rubber will raise.

Mexico has its own way of conserving tires. Mexican motorists are required, by government regulation, to keep their cars idle one day a week. Car owners select their "motorless day" and then must display on their windshields a sticker of a color designated for that day of the week.

HOMER

THE STORY THUS FAR: Amos Croy, former sergeant in the Civil War, left Ohio and settled near Marysville, Missouri. He married Susan Sewell, daughter of another covered wagon pioneer, and soon a son, Homer, was born. Homer's earliest recollection was of a cyclone which blew the sod barn down and wrecked the orchard. Sunday weighing was an institution of the Croy farm. The neighbors would gather after dinner and guess the weights of the steers. Amos usually won. He was an excellent farmer and had an exceptionally keen mind. His one aim was to be a good farmer and develop Homer into a real farmer. Amos believed that the farm was the only place worth while.

CHAPTER IV

"Will it mean supper?"

"I don't think so. I think all you need count on is dinner."

Then Ma would say, "Jim always likes chicken. I'll have Homer run down a chicken."

Tuesday morning we'd be up early and get the chores taken care of and the horses turned out to pasture, as we wouldn't need them today. Then we'd all go out on the front porch to wait. Pretty soon we would see one of the neighbors coming across the field and Pa would say, "Go out and wave, Homer," and I would go out to the fence and wave my hat. In a moment, Harve would wave back.

Pretty soon he would be at the front porch and Pa would say, "Have you got your gloves?" and Harve would slap his hip pocket and say, "Right here."

We would talk neighborhood news and crops. Harve would say, "I've got lots of down corn." And Pa would say, "It was that wind of July twelfth." And Harve would say, "It seems to me we get more down corn than we used to." Pa would say, "One good thing about it, it matures just as well."

Ma would say, "How is your wife getting along with her grapes?" and Harve would say, "She's got bags drippin' from everywhere. If I get up in the night, I bang smack into one." Then we would all laugh. "Her hands are all discolored. I don't know what she's goin' to do when Sunday comes."

"The Lord will overlook that," Ma would say. Ma was strong for the Lord.

Pa was for the Lord, too, but not just because somebody's hands were stained.

It wouldn't be long before Jim Vert would come over the brow of the hill with his dehorning chute rattling along on its two wheels. Jim would be standing in the front part of the chute, his head not much higher than the boards.

We would go out to meet him, all except Ma, because she didn't like to think what the dehorning chute stood for. I didn't either, but on a farm certain things have to be done.

Jim would open up his toolbox and get out his blood-stained jumper with brass buttons on the sleeves. Then he would get out his saw which had a steel frame, and a long thin, vicious-looking blade. Then he would turn a thumbscrew till the blade was so tight it would go ping! when he picked it with his thumbnail. Jim would squint one eye and sight along the blade as if it was a gun barrel. "I think I'd better give it a rip or two."

His hand would go into the box and out would come a file and he would begin to dress the savage teeth. While he was doing this, we would exchange news.

"How is your down corn?" Pa would say.

"I've got lots of it. Just lots," Jim would say as he sighted along the teeth. "It was that wind of July twelfth."

"That's what I told Harve," Pa would say with satisfaction.

Jim would take his place at the front end of the chute with his saw, and Pa and Harve and I would start to drive the calves in closer and closer. They'd throw up their heads and roll their eyes, because they knew something was the matter.

The chute was shaped like the letter V. There was a series of holes on each side through which poles could be pushed. We'd round up the calves closer and closer, sometimes one calf ahead, sometimes another. "Huey!" Pa would call and wave his hands and a calf would fasten his eyes on the opening of the chute and start forward in a hopeful little trot. Then we'd make a dash and slam the poles behind him. Jim would be watching his chance and take the big heavy board, shaped like the letter U, and jam it down over the calf's neck so the calf wouldn't move. There the calf would stand, kicking and bawling, his sides thumping in and out.

"Let him quiet down," Jim would say. "It's always a good idea to let the first one quiet down. Gives the others confidence."

We'd lean against the chute and let him quiet down.

"A girl was around to see me about the school," Jim would say. "Did she come to see you, Amos?"

"Not yet."

"Well, I talked to her. But you can't tell anything from talkin' to 'em. I guess he's all right now."

Jim would give his sleeves a hitch, and lean over the top of the chute.

"Hold his nose till I get started, Homer. Grab his nostrils."

At first the calf wouldn't pay much attention to the saw, but Jim's arms would be working back and forth and the blade would be going grh-grh-grh. Then all of a sudden the calf would begin to pitch and kick and bellow and white slobber would run down on my hand.

"Hold him, hold him!" Jim would pant, his elbows working.

Off would come a horn and blood would squirt out of the holes in the soft horn part of the head. Then Jim would lean over farther and start on the other horn.

Jim would take out a stick he had padded with cloth, daub it into his ear and swab it on the spurting horns. Little by little the blood would stop. "I always wait till they stop bleeding. The teacher looked capable, I'll say that for her."

"You can't tell by talking to 'em," Pa would say.

"That's a fact. Let him go."

Harve would raise the heavy U-shaped board and the calf would stumble out, shaking his head and bellowing.

"The best thing is to ask for their recommendations. Even then you've got to take a chance," Jim would say. "Still she was a nice lookin' girl."

"That don't mean she would be a good teacher."

"It sure don't," Jim would say and give another shove on the saw.

All morning it would go on, the number of calves in the pen growing smaller and the number in the barn lot growing bigger. Finally Pa would pull out his watch by its leather strap and say, "Well, I expect we'd better go to the house and see if there's anything on the table."

Knock down the mud-daubers nests.

Jim would put down his saw. "I'll go to the tank first."

Jim would go to the galvaniz'd iron tank by the windmill and get off the worst. Then we would all walk to the house over the corn-cobs, and Pa would bring out a pan of hot water and put it on the wash bench in the yard. Jim would pick up the soap and scrub himself, leaning over so the water would drip on the ground. When he finished he would go to the roller towel on the back porch, dry himself, and give the towel a pull to show how polite he was.

We would all go in and sit down at the table. Pa always asked company to say the blessing, but that was on Sundays; this was a workday. If this had been Sunday and Jim had had on his good clothes, he could have asked the blessing. So Pa bent over his plate and thanked the Lord for what we were about to receive. By the time he finished, Jim would be looking over the table.

"Homer was a big help to us this morning," Jim would say as he reached for the fried chicken. "I guess he'll be a help now," Pa would say and they'd all laugh a little.

"Tall like his mother, ain't he?" Ma would straighten up a little. Then say, "How are your boys, Jim?"

"Shuckin' today."

"You've got a nice pair of boys there, Jim," Pa would say. "Good workers."

"I guess they'll do," Jim would say modestly.

Pa would mention some of the neighborhood news that Jim had told us, and Jim, to be obliging, would tell more. Ma would get the things off the range as quietly as she could so as not to miss anything.

"My wife's tryin' out a new brooder," Jim would say. "I told her she needn't do so much work, but you know how women are."

"I know," Ma would say, then sit down, with a drop the last few inches.

At the end of the meal, Jim would get out his quill toothpick and we would sit there talking more easily than at the beginning.

Pa would say, "Come in the front room, Jim," and Jim would say, "How much did you pay for your rocker, Amos?" and Pa would say, "Six-eighty, wasn't it, Susan?" Jim was always a great hand to know the price of everything.

As Jim was rocking and picking, he would say, "Well, you got your money's worth."

Ma would come to the door and say, "Is your wife coming to the chapel Sunday?"

"I expect so. She's a great hand to go to church."

"I'll get to see her, then," Ma would say and go into the kitchen.

At last Pa would say, "I expect we'd better go back," and we would all get up and start, me a little in the rear.

It wouldn't be long till the saw was again going grh-grh-grh.

After a while the calves would all be on the same side of the fence, walking around and shaking their heads and now and then giving a bellow.

"How long you goin' to feed, Amos?" Jim would ask.

"I'll hold them a year at least. I don't believe in turning light stock."

"That's just the way I see it," Jim would say and wipe off his saw and go to the tank. "I'll get the rest off at home."

"You want your check now?" Pa would ask.

"If you wouldn't mind," Jim would say politely and Pa would send me to the house for his indelible pencil.

We'd put the team on and the dehorning chute would rise out of the wheel holes. Scattered on the ground would be the horns; some would have little patches of hair clinging to them. Pretty soon the chute would be swaying and teetering toward the road and Pa would begin picking up the horns and burying them so the smell of blood that night wouldn't keep the cows from giving down their milk.

Dehorning day would be over. But after I went to bed I could still hear the calves giving their plaintive bellows, and I would feel sorry for them.

At about this time I got my first "lesson" in life. At least it is the first "lesson" I can remember:

My mother raised chickens and, since she was not "strong," I had to help her. She liked to study them, and especially the way they treated one another. One day, as we were sitting on the porch and the chickens were scratching in the yard, she said:

"Chickens are just like people. They have ways of grading each other just as we have. They look up to some hens and they look down on others. The hen that keeps her feathers oiled and makes the best impression is the one they respect most. She's the one that gets the tidbits and she's the one that gets the last peck."

"People are like that. The ones that put up the best appearance in the way of money, or home, or position, get the most respect. Every henyard is run that way and every human group is run that way. Now you watch, as you go through life, and see if it don't work out!"

It was such a whimsical idea, I could hardly believe it; but my mother pointed out a hen that was the leader, and it was exactly as my mother said. This was not only true with the hens, but also with the roosters. We had a sort of head rooster who was really cock of the walk. Something had happened to his voice; there was a hoarse note. Early of a morning his voice would be the first one to go off; then the other roosters crowded in exact turn.

We had a vivid illustration. A hen, that was a leader and got the last peck, was caught by a hog and her feathers were torn out so that she presented a lugubrious appearance. That hen lost her leadership and never got it back.

Homely and simple as it was, my mother's bit of philosophy made a deep impression on me.

In March my father would say, "Homer, it's time to clean out the smokehouse," and my heart would hit the floor. Work. I would have to move all the loose odds and ends out, knock down the mud-dauber nests, tighten the tin can lids that had been nailed over the knotholes, and sweep. The stove, from one season to another, was kept in a corner, and now I would have to haul it out and set it in the middle of the floor.

When everything was ready, Pa would say, "All right now, we'll rub." More work.

He would fill a candy bucket a third full of brine, and sit down on a little bench outside the smokehouse and slosh the ham up and down; then he would pull the ham up on the bench and rub in salt and brown sugar so the ham would not develop "skippers." The meat had been salted down in January, after we had butchered, but he always gave it this extra rubbing just to be "sure."

He would take a butcher knife, which had been worn down to a point, and make a hole in the shank end of the ham, run a piece of heavy wire through and bend it into the form of an S-hook.

Proficient Knockers

Negative criticism does not call for a special degree of intelligence. Even the mentally sterile person can be a very valuable destructive critic. Neither does it take a great deal of energy.

Many lazy men are very proficient fault-finders and "with alarm viewers." The truly active person is perhaps the most lenient judge of the activities of others, simply because he has no time to be a flaw-picker.

Very Attractive

THE round-necked, extended-shoulder treatment of this nightgown is very flattering and unusually easy to cut and sew. Insert a narrow satin or velvet ribbon in the draw-string top—make the sash of the same ribbon. Edge the attractive bed or breakfast jacket with narrow lace and tie it with another pretty bow of the same shade ribbon.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1231 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Size 14 nightgown requires 3 3/4 yards of 39-inch material; jacket 1 1/4 yards.

Due to an unusually large demand and current war conditions, slightly more time is required in filling orders for a few of the most popular pattern numbers.

"Adam and Fallen Man" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, November 5.

The Golden Text was, "Sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace" (Rom. 6: 14).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "And God said, 'Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth. . . .

there IS a serious waste paper shortage!

and you can make it your patriotic duty to help in this present emergency by saving waste paper right now.

Only one-third of all the waste paper in this country is collected and reclaimed. It is up to every American to help salvage more of it!

BECAUSE

Waste paper is salvaged and made into paper boxes, cartons and shipping cases needed to send endless supplies to our Armed Forces, and for essential civilian needs.

Life-saving blood plasma is carried overseas in paper containers. Emergency Food Rations move through steaming jungle, desert heat and frigid Arctic cold—in paper containers.

Vital Red Cross supplies—medicines, serums, bandages—are hurried to the four corners of the earth in paper containers.

Food for American prisoners of war is delivered in paper containers.

Waste paper is made into actual implements of war, such as bomb bands, practice bombs, wing tips, airplane signals, parachute flares, ammunition chests, shell protectors, shell containers.

Here on the Home Front, too, countless essential civilian and wartime items are moving night and day via train, truck and airplane in paper containers and cartons. Food . . . clothing . . . airplane parts . . . tools for busy war plants . . . are shipped in cases, boxes and containers made from the reclaimed waste paper which you can help salvage.

YOU SHOULD SAVE

Newspapers, magazines
Cardboard boxes,
cartons and shipping cases
Paper bags, wrapping paper
Letters, envelopes and other advertising matter
Old record files
Contents of every wastebasket

Any kind of waste paper . . . even such items as discarded cigarette packages and used match books are reclaimable.

NEW LENOX

Dolores Anderson

The November meeting of the New Lenox Garden club, was held Thursday afternoon in the home of Mrs. O. V. Rowe. Assisting the hostess was Mrs. E. A. Waither.

Mrs. Harry Stevenson, program chairman, introduced the guest speaker, Dr. Gayle Hufford, whose topic was Conservation. Dr. Hufford pointed out the reasons why the present and future of the State of Illinois depend upon the conservation of our trees and forests.

There has been much favorable comment about the planting of flowering shrubs donated by the New Lenox Garden Club and placed at the base of the New Lenox Honor Roll Plaque.

The next meeting of the Garden Club will be Dec. 7, in the home of Mrs. Howard Porter.

A letter from Cpl. Bernard Ruetiger to Mr. and Mrs. Len Anderson: Camp Gruber, Okla. October 24, 1944.

Hi Pals: It has taken me a long time to get down to writing, but I have finally made it. How are things in the town of New Lenox going? I imagine that everything is really hustling and bustling around that good old place, how about it?

Well they have me in the hospital here at Gruber and operated on me as you have already heard. Never did I ever think that I would be laying in the hospital for a month. But as the old saying goes you never know what to expect. They have put me thru the paces down here at Gruber, but I guess you can expect that.

I see where they have finally given Rollin Orr a break and sent him back to the states. He was really stuck in that isolated place for a long time and the break he received was well deserved.

I was certainly happy to hear about his return to the states.

You probably know all about the big step which I am going to take. It will happen on my furlough. The definite date I cannot say, but when it does come off Marge and I will be expecting you two to be there. Say hello to everyone and if you find time, drop me a line.

Your Pal,
Bernie

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"That's really a great editorial you just read to us, Judge. Where did you say it appeared?"

"In 'The Stars and Stripes'...the newspaper of the U.S. Armed Forces in Europe. Kind of gives us folks back home something to think about, doesn't it, Bill?"

"It certainly does, Judge. Particularly the last paragraph. Would you mind reading that again?"

"Glad to, Bill. It says, 'We can remember the days of prohibition, when moonshine whiskey made quick fortunes for bootleggers, crooked politicians and dishonest police officials. As a result, we claim we know what we want in the way of liquor legislation and feel those at home should wait until we return before initiating further legislation on liquor control'."

WARTIME IDEAS FOR POULTRYMEN

Keep fall and winter egg production at a peak with your

ELECTRIC WATER WARMER

100 Eggs In One Day was the high point reached by Wallace Matthews' 135 hen flock. His capsule-type poultry water warmer was a contributing factor.

Keep the eggs coming when the prices are highest—that's the way to make more profits from your flock. Although fall and winter months generally bring a slump in egg production, there are several easy tricks you can use on your layers to keep them working harder than ever to fill Uncle Sam's egg quota, to increase your poultry earnings.

One is night-lighting which lengthens the hens' laying day. Another is poultry water warming which keeps water at a drinkable temperature of 50° during cold weather and thus encourages your flock to drink more of the water that builds more and bigger eggs.

If you don't already have a poultry water warmer, you can easily make one in a short time from the plans below. The Mommence High School Ag students in the "How-To-Build-It" scenes below, constructed theirs at a total cost of only 50c—chances are that you have enough odds and ends lying around your place to fill the material bill.

How to build a POULTRY WATER WARMER

MATERIALS

1" Lumber Porcelain socket and rubberized cord
Tin can Light bulb
Sawdust

Build a box from lumber, install and wire socket. Cur both ends from tin can and place over socket and bulb. Pack sawdust insulation around can. Provide a perch according to plans, place pail on warmer, plug in—that's all!

With captain Harold Cooper at the wheel the V-Eighters sped into a new high team series and high game for the season. They won 2 games from the Paperhangers. Cooper had a high game of 208 and one of his team mates—Hamilton, a high series of 544. Andy Bueschel's 204 game kept the V-Eighters from sweeping the series.

The Bankers swept 3 games from the Oilers to move up into 2 games of first place. The Bankers are moving up steadily during the past few weeks and loom as the team to beat.

WHAT pitcher in baseball has had the greatest combination of speed and a curve ball?

This argument developed with great speed recently in a gathering of baseball notables. Your correspondent put this matter up to a long list of managers and old players, who should know what they are talking about. It was generally agreed that Walter Johnson had the king of all fast balls. That's about all old Barney needed in his prime.

It was also conceded that among the smarter pitchers you had to rate Alexander, Mathewson and Hubbell. Dizzy Dean was also given a high rating as an all-arounder with speed, a good curve and a change of pace when necessary.

I think it was Casey Stengel who added up all the qualifications needed and his score card put Carl Hubbell on top. After all Hubbell won 24 consecutive games.

Cy Young drew the nomination for durability, including arm and head through more than 500 victories, 510 to be exact.

The list of great pitchers is extremely long, dating back to 1900. There was Ed Walsh—Addie Joss—Smokey Joe Wood—Jack Chesbro—(both Walsh and Chesbro won 40 or more games in one season). There was Herb Pennock and Lefty Grove and Ed Plank. There was Bob Feller, one of the best. And Dazzy Vance, voted the most effective of all pitchers excluding Johnson. Alexander, Matty and Hubbell finished under a blanket.

Connie Mack's Decision

In the midst of all this confusion we finally decided to put the problem up to Connie Mack, who has only been around in baseball a brief matter of 60 odd years.

"Just what is the argument about?" Mr. Mack asked.

"The argument is this—what one pitcher had the greatest combination of speed and curves?"

"My goodness," Connie said. "I think that's quite simple. His name is Rube Waddell. Now Johnson had the best speed. But Walter only had a fair curve ball. His speed was enough. Matty and Alexander depended largely on control and smartness. Grove and Feller both had fine speed. But you are talking about both factors—speed and curves."

"Now I'll tell you about the Rube. He had terrific speed. He was a big, loose, lanky fellow who was almost as fast as Johnson. I know outside of Johnson I never saw any one faster."

"But his curve was even better than his speed. The Rube had the fastest and the deepest curve I've ever seen. You know what great hitters Lajoie and Cobb were? What wonderful batting eyes they both had? Well, I've seen the Rube pour one over that started and looked waist high. I've seen both Larry and Ty swing at this pitch as the catcher dug it out of the dirt. I've seen great hitters miss Rube's curve ball more than a foot. I honestly believe that the Rube's curve often broke at least two feet. But what is more important it was a fast curve, one that came up in a hurry and then ducked like lightning."

"Now, I'm not saying Waddell was the greatest pitcher of all time. I'm saying that he could have been and should have been for the simple reason that he had more natural stuff than any other pitcher I've ever seen. I mean by this that he had the best combination of what you are talking about—speed and curve. But the Rube had too many sidelines. Now and then he'd take a few days off and go fishing, without saying anything to me about it."

I recalled one of the last times I ever saw Waddell pitch. He had Cleveland beaten 1 to 0 in the last of the ninth when an error, a Texas leaguer and a pass filled the bases with none out. The next three coming up were Lajoie, Bradley and Flick, three of the best.

The Rube had brought out two friends who were sitting in a box. He left the pitcher's mound and walked over to the box remarking, "Ladies, I'll be with you in about two minutes."

He then struck out Lajoie, Bradley and Flick on nine pitched balls. I'll have to string with Mr. Mack on this opinion, which I like to do on any opinion Mr. Mack has to offer.

Georgia's Contribution

The Red Clay Hills of Georgia have given sport more than their share of stars. It was in this state that a kid by the name of Tyrus Raymond Cobb came to fame around 40 years ago, via Augusta and Detroit.

It was from Atlanta another kid named Bobby Jones moved into the national spotlight of golf back in 1916 at Merion when said youth was only 14 years old. Such champions give any state a running start.

Candling Eggs on Farm Increases Profit

Their Quality Will Increase Consumption

While candling is not an exact science, it serves to eliminate those eggs which will mark down all eggs marketed. Fourteen out of every hundred eggs are "rejects" on the market. Many of these could be utilized on the farm, for home (the better ones) and as hog or poultry feed for the worse "rejects."

An unusual number of "spotted" eggs means that the flock has inherited this defect. It might be possible for the farmer, who has a large number of spotting in his eggs, to pick out the offenders and cull them out. The spotting rejects alone costs the farmer $45,000,000 annually. If the farmer removes all "rejects" he will secure a better price for the balance of his eggs than he would have for his entire output, good and bad.

Dirty eggs should be cleaned. A lime wash will not show, even when examined by experts. Fresh eggs will show an air-space of not over one-eighth of an inch in depth. When the egg is fresh the yolk will remain about center.

Blemishes, blood spots or damage spots on the yolk show up as dark spots when the egg is candled. Blood spots place the eggs as inedible, but can be utilized for home consumption. Development of germ in fertile eggs also places the egg in undesirable class.

In candling it is rather easy to tell eggs of high and low quality, but it does require skill to pick those in the intermediate stage. Persons who are skilled in the art, however, are able to accurately grade the eggs properly.

Agriculture In the News

Peanuts Gain.

The application of chemistry to agriculture has resulted in the ground pea or peanut becoming a real factor in its own name as well as a serious competitor for other farm crops, particularly the soybean.

The peanut furnishes a cork substitute, they yield more oil per acre than cottonseed and they rank high as an energy food. A fiber similar to rayon is now being made from peanut protein. It can furnish artificial butter and a substitute coffee. Cheap, milder and less stimulating than coffee, it might become a competitor to real article.

The peanut can be used in the manufacture of salad oils, shaving lotions, cosmetics, soaps, dyes, axle grease, massage paste for infantile paralysis, bases in medicine, flour, candy, insulation, explosives, paper board, textile lubricant, glycerine, floor sweeping compounds, fertilizer, stock and poultry feed and as fuel.

Diet Saves Pigs

Market savings in weaned pigs as a result of improved diets fed during gestation and lactation periods was found by B. W. Fairbanks of the University of Illinois. Successful weaning was increased from 7 to 83 per cent.

Satisfactory results during lactation are dependent in part upon feeding during gestation. The feeding regime during gestation must not be ignored when the question of high mortality among baby pigs is being considered. The addition of 10 per cent alfalfa meal to the ration brought the increased results.

Mastitis of Cows

Chronic infectious mastitis is a slowly progressive disease of the udder and in many cows causes partial and sometimes complete destruction of a large proportion of the milk-producing tissue. The quality of milk is often lowered because of increased bacterial contamination and is not desirable for human consumption. There are often no clinical symptoms observed until milk production begins to fall and the cows become an expense.

Skeeter Fly High

By LEALON MARTIN JR.
McClure Newspaper Syndicate
Released by WNU

THE last tinge of red had faded from the far edge of Lake Palourde. Eddie LeBlanc sat alone upon the levee bench and watched the dusk thicken. He thought, it'll soon be dark; wonder why Cicely and Jim aren't back. He tried again to put the bitterness out of his mind, but it was of no use. His best friend at camp—whom he'd brought home here to Timbalier on their week-end leave from Camp Shelley—and his girl! His girl!

With the twilight the mosquitoes came out of the marshes. Their humming was the high-pitched whine of fighting planes moving to attack—and they came in numberless legions to settle on everything that was man's in Timbalier.

Eddie slapped lightly at them. Skeeters didn't hurt a Cajun, but the sight of so many made him think of the old song. Softly he sang:

"Oh, skeeter, he fly high, oh,
Skeeter he fly low, oh,
Skeeter he no care, oh,
Who he bite or why, oh!"

But the song only brought back his trouble to a greater degree. "Cicely, I guess, is like the skeeter," he said half-aloud. "She don't care no more. It was the first time he'd really faced facts—and now his mind raced back over them."

"Me, I would like for you to make the visit with me in Timbalier on the week-end leave," he'd invited Jim Blake back in Camp Shelley. Ever since they'd entered camp together as rookies the shy Cajun had looked up to Jim and his assurance, admiring his air of knowing his way around.

Jim had taken him up on the invitation—and Eddie's woes had begun.

Before they'd been in Timbalier an hour Jim was bored to exasperation. "For Pete's sake, Eddie," he'd said soon after they stepped from the puffing little lugger that brought the daily mail, "is this all there is to it?"

Eddie had looked at the fifteen or twenty houses, the three stores, the schoolhouse and church. He hadn't ever thought of it that way, but he supposed it was not much to an outsider, particularly a man like Jim. "Oui, yes, I'm afraid so," he said apologetically.

"And what do we do to kill time?" Eddie shrugged. "Me, I had thought tonight, Friday, we'd visit my girl, Cicely. But she's gone to visit Aunt Marie till tomorrow. Saturday night there is the dance."

"Yeah," said Jim, "but can't we step out tonight? Get a couple dates?"

"But Cicely, she is my girl," protested Eddie. "We have an understanding."

Jim, looking disgusted, changed the subject. They went frogging that night, and it passed off all right. The next day Jim was bored despite all Eddie's efforts at entertainment.

By Saturday evening Jim was in a mood that Eddie recognized. He'd ended in the guardhouse when he'd started a night out feeling like that at camp.

Jim cut in three times on Jules Lemain and Elise Gautreaux who, next to Cicely, was the prettiest girl on the floor. When he started back a fourth time Eddie saw Jules reach back to his hip pocket, patting his knife. "Come, Cicely," Eddie told her, "I want you to dance with Jim."

He stopped Jim just in time. His friend had taken this as meaning he didn't mind how much of Cicely's time he appropriated. Cicely hadn't seemed to object, but Jim had stuck with them even when Eddie walked her home.

"See you tomorrow, Babe," Jim called as she went in.

All the next day, their last twenty-four hours, it had been a threesome, with Jim doing most of the talking. Cicely was smiling and attentive. So, when Jim suggested, just before dusk on Sunday evening, that they walk to the store for a coke, Eddie sulked behind. It seemed as if Cicely was lost to him.

Now the thought returned: Wonder why they aren't back—and suddenly he heard them coming. He sat up and the mosquitoes rose and then swarmed down again.

"Look, Babe," said Jim, leaning close to her when all three were seated upon the bench, "will you write to me?" "Darn!" he exclaimed, scratching furiously, "these things bite like hornets!"

"They don't worry me," Cicely said. "Do they you, Eddie?"

"No, me, I don't mind skeeters," Eddie replied, "they don't hurt Cajuns."

But Jim was busy now with his ankles. Then the black cloud alighted on his unprotected neck. For a moment longer he fought the battle. "Say," he exclaimed, jumping up abruptly, "I can't stand these any more! Going to the house." He went away and Eddie saw happily that he was on the run. He looked at Cicely and the light in her eyes made his heart leap. Softly he began to sing:

"Oh, skeeter, he fly high, oh,
Skeeter he fly low, oh,
Skeeter he no care, oh,
Who he bite or why, oh!"

For Wendell Willkie:

You were America at all its best
As clean and fresh as any prairie wind,
And when you took your final journey west
You left a fragrant memory behind,
Yet now the little men who cried you down
Shed unctuous tears and claim you as their own,
And fit you with a smug, unwieldy crown
Which they well know that you had long outgrown;

You were America . . . and millions weep
Who felt in you a comrade and a friend,
And yet we have your prophecy to reap,
A prophecy you left at journey's end . . .

America is big enough for all . . .
The poor, the weak, the humble and the small!—Don Wahn.

The Magazines: Pip of a SEPiece by Lieut. John Mason Brown, deftly test-tubing differences between Americans and Britishers. The importance of such an article should not be underestimated. A primary requisite for international friendship is a keen understanding of other nations.

Broadway Smalltalk: Malcolm Meacher is no longer writing for the March of Time because of its refusal to deal with the issues on Margaret Halsey's best-seller, "Some of My Best Friends Are Soldiers." . . . Customs men have detained a Met singer in Miami, who returned from Brazil the other day with undeclared gems valued at over $15,000. . . . Hoagy Carmichael's music for Ballet Russe will be called "Swing Street." . . . Don Ross, the Chicago reporter who went to Warner's for a job in the press dept., wound up as an actor in Ida Lupino's next flicker. . . . For the first time since the war started N. Y. university is hazing freshmen. . . . F. Sinatra wishes the egg-thrower would come over to some gym with him "for a workout."

GIs are confused. General Eisenhower wears the four stars of his rank on the left side of his shirt collar, while Generals Bradley and Marshall wear them on the right. . . . The reason is that U. S. army regulations state: "All articles of uniform for wear by the General of the armies and the Chief of Staff are such as each may prescribe for himself." . . . So General Eisenhower could wear a derby and the four stars on the seat of his pants, if he liked.

Ass't President Byrnes has asked for a trained staff of 25,000 persons to start termination of war contracts. It will be Washington's biggest postwar agency. . . . F. Sinatra will sing for troops in the S. Pacific. . . . The other day Her Highness, accompanied by four bodyguards, invaded a Fifth avenue shop, upset the gaping personnel and routine of the place and then bought $14 worth of stuff.

What they don't announce is that an entertainer, overseas for two years, is in a Paris hospital with a severe case of shell shock. . . . Every time we read the insults—hurled by a few critics at showfolks who go overseas—we think of Carole Lombard and the actor victims in that Lisbon plane crash.

Love Letter:

The weary town will soon be fast asleep,
The moon is cold and pitiless as doom,
And yet we have a rendezvous to keep,
Within the shadows of a quiet room . . .
The candlelight tints beauty on your face,
The wine will steal reality away,
And you we make can quietly efface
The terror of a new, unwanted day . . .

And so it goes for those who chase a star,
The search may end in heartbreak and defeat,
But there is always magic where you are,
A magic that is tremulous and sweet . . .

And who will have more lovely scars to show,
If you and love should ever chance to go?
—Don Wahn.

Sounds in the Night: In the Zanzibar: "She's mean enough to be the heroine of a best-selling novel." . . . In La Conga: "His radio program is where a good gag goes when it dies." . . . In Lindy's: "Excuse me, lady. I was just trying to make a dream come true." . . . At the Copacabana: "If they carry Maine they won't be doing anything different than the banks there have been doing for years!"

More dramatic than any of the Broadway shows was that moment at the Colony when the Duke and Duchess of Windsor bumped into Lady Thelma Furness, the Duke's favorite companion until Wally came along.

The Magic Lanterns: The nation can keep warm this winter merely by viewing clinches between Hedy Lamarr and Paul Henreid, who start a bonfire of emotion in a swift symphony, "The Conspirators." . . . Everything in "Sweet and Lowdown" plays second fiddle to Benny Goodman's clarinet. Too bad the scenario isn't in tune with the music. . . . Fibber McGee and Molly's "Heavenly Days" gently twists Washington. Difficult to understand why legislative namby-pambies were leery about releasing it.

Faithful Tibetans Carry Prayer Wheels to Spin

Every faithful Tibetan Buddhist carries a prayer wheel, which he constantly spins round. The Tibetans believe in constant prayer, saying that the more often you pray the more likely are your prayers to be heard.

So inside every prayer wheel are hundreds of tiny pieces of paper, each one bearing the prayer "Om Mani Padme Hum," which, being interpreted, means "O, the Jewel in the Lotus." Every time the wheel is spun round, all the pieces of paper rotate, so that each turn means that hundreds of fluttering pieces of paper have sent their prayer to Heaven.

Unit Shelves Are Easy to Build; May Be Divided or Multiplied

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

WHETHER you have a house of your own or whether you move often, unit book shelves are the answer to many a problem. They may be scaled to fit almost any space; you may add to them as needed and they may be shifted from one place to another according to your mood.

You need no special skill to make the three units shown. These well proportioned shelves were designed especially for amateur homecrafters to make with the simplest tools. A compass saw from the five-and-dime will cut the curved shelves of the end units. Because the shelves were designed by a homemaker, a simple method of constructing them with no open dust space at the bottom was worked out.

NOTE: Pattern 270 gives a full size pattern for the curved shelves of these book cases and large diagrams with dimensions of all the straight pieces. Also a complete list of materials required and illustrated directions for each step in the construction of the units. To get this pattern enclose 15 cents with name and address and send direct to:
